

➤ Turn left and continue along until you reach The Croft on your right. Walk through the wooden gate and continue until it becomes Barwell Road. Continue along until you reach Church Road on your right. If you look at the building on the corner, there is a reminder of an earlier form of a 'Billboard' advert.

➤ Turn right and continue along Church Road until you reach Main Street then turn left.

The Free Church on the corner is not the original one. There is a stone tablet in the wall which details how the current Church was built to replace one that had been destroyed by bombing during World War II.

Until recently it was believed German bombers returning from raids in Coventry dumped their bombs over Kirby Muxloe in order to lighten the aircraft and increase their speed, and in doing this destroyed a large proportion of the village. However, thanks to extensive research by the Kirby Muxloe Local History Group, we now understand on the night that Leicester was heavily bombed, Luftwaffe bombers also attacked military targets in the area of Kirby Muxloe, narrowly missing the railway line near Western Park, but completely destroying Kirby's fine Free Church building, probably in an attempt to hit the nearby railway line in Kirby. The railway that runs through Kirby Muxloe would have been used to transport military armaments to/from local airfields at Desford and Braunstone. Fortunately, there were few serious injuries and only a handful of houses were destroyed, mostly after the event as a safety precaution.

➤ Continue along Oakcroft Avenue until you reach Main Street and turn left. As you walk along Main Street you will pass by St Bartholomew's Church.

There are some fascinating Gravestones on the right-hand side of the graveyard, including a set of five in a row. One of them is of particular interest. It dates back to 1763 and has some very detailed imagery and wording at the bottom. The person who carved must have been very talented.

➤ After visiting the Church, return to the Main Road and continue until you reach Station Road / Hedgerow Lane. Turn right then left into Gullet Lane and continue.

4 Leicester Forest West

➤ After crossing a bridge over the Railway line, take the footpath on the left which passes to the right of the gates to Kirby Muxloe Golf Course. Continue on this path past the golf course until you reach a wooden fence. Continue across the field following the footpath straight on and not the path that bears left. The footpath continues across the fields until it exits onto the B582 Leicester Lane.

Thurlaston

➤ Start your walk on Croft Road, Thurlaston.

Although this walk goes across large open fields, past golf courses, through housing estates and across farmland, if you were to do the walk back at the time of the Domesday Book in 1086, the whole of the walk would be in forest. Leicester forest was listed as being four leagues long and one league across. This would convert to it being approximately three to four miles wide by almost fourteen miles long although a league was not an accurate distance, it was meant to be how far a person would walk in one hour, it still means that the forest covered a huge area.

Sadly, the forest could not be sustained and in 1628 King Charles sanctioned the disafforestation of the area, it was split into lots and sold off to wealthy landowners who cleared most of it of the trees.

The process of disafforestation caused riots among those affected by loss of rights to pasture and resources.

According to the census returns of 1871, the areas of Leicester Forest East and West were sparsely populated. Leicester Forest East had a population of 89 living in 19 houses and Leicester Forest West only had 34 people living in 8 houses. How things have changed.

Continue on the path until it exits onto the B582 Desford Road.

3 Kirby Muxloe

Take the surfaced path and you will pass a small circular area with a large stone that has a plaque on it relating to the burial of a 'Time Capsule'.

Worth a detour

If you wish you can turn right on Oakcroft Avenue and continue towards Kirby Muxloe Castle where you can take a walk around the unfinished remains and there is one of the Fosse Foxes.

The story of the Castle takes us back in time to the War of the Roses. When William, Lord Hastings, began rebuilding his family's seat in Kirby Muxloe in 1480 in lavish style with this grand red brick and stone design, he must have felt comfortable with his position of power close to Edward IV.

William couldn't have known that just 3 years later, Edward IV would be dead and himself dragged into the Tower of London and executed without trial by the soon-to-be Richard III.

In Kirby Muxloe, his grand design would remain unfinished, a permanent memorial to the ruthlessness of England's 32-year civil war that shaped this country's future for generations to come.
